Orchids

Armacost & Royston Inc.
In presenting this, our first catalog of Orchid plants, it has been our endeavor to get together those varieties and species of Orchids which our experience shows are most likely to prove ideal for the private grower. This catalog is intended primarily for that ever-widening circle of discriminating people who are turning to Orchid growing, realizing the vast amount of interest and enjoyment to be obtained by close association, not only with the flowers, but with the actual growing of the plants.

The many hundreds of hybrids and varieties of the species listed in the catalog offer a great variation as to form, color and season of flowering, and all have been selected because we know that they can be grown with comparative ease, and that they produce flowers which are well worth while. Those of special merit which we would particularly call attention to are indicated in heavy type throughout the catalog.

Each plant listed is growing in the Nursery at the time of going to press, but we have not included many other varieties of which we have but a limited stock.

Unless otherwise described, all of the plants are of flowering strength, and are large enough and sufficiently strong to flower as their season comes around.

It is, of course, not possible to list the great quantities of seedlings which we have coming on at Sawtelle in all sizes and endless variety, but we would be pleased to send quotations to anyone who is interested in growing on to maturity small seedlings of very worth while parentage. To watch the development of such plants is exceedingly fascinating.

The mild climate of California makes it possible to closely approximate the natural growing conditions which Orchids experience in their native habitat, and this is conducive to health and vigor; so that our plants possess that vitality which ensures their shipping satisfactorily and adjusting themselves to the local conditions of the purchaser.

We guarantee all plants to be true to name; all plants for shipment are carefully selected and prepared and packed securely, although as lightly as safety permits, and all packing is free of charge.

We extend a cordial invitation to visit the Nursery. We are quite sure that the various stages of development of Orchid plants from seed to the plant in bloom will prove of interest.

An aeroplane photograph of our thirty-seven acres of nursery at Sauletelle, California, where over three acres of the greenhouses are devoted exclusively to orchids. All those who are interested in the methods adopted for developing these plants from seed and in the plants in bloom will find a visit to the nursery of much interest.

Portion of the Incubator House showing the culture flasks in which the seeds are germinated. Some of the tiny plants are ready for potting on after nine months while others remain in this stage from two to three years.
Brassocattleyas

No collection should be without at least a few plants of hybrids from the Brassovola, as these are among the most remarkable of orchids. They are usually of large size, the fringed labellum is very striking and of great beauty. This family is being still further improved by the hybridists, and many new and wonderful hybrids are appearing every year. The cultural requirements are similar to those of Cattleyas and Laeliocattleyas, except perhaps they enjoy a little more heat.

Tropical Tree Laden with Orchids and Other Epiphytal Plants

Here nature does all the work: the fertilizing of the flower and the germination of the seed; quite a contrast to modern scientific methods of orchid production as shown in our illustrations on pages four and twelve.
HYBRID CATTLEYAS are considered by many to be the most gorgeous and decorative of all Orchids. For the most part they are easily grown. The range of color of the flowers is unusually comprehensive, and where it is intended to commercialize to any extent, these are undoubtedly the most profitable species of Orchids to grow, and so variable is the flowering season, that it is now possible to have some hybrids in bloom practically all of the time.

Cattleya Species

Owing to the many wonderful hybrids which have been raised, the Cattleya Species are not now so highly prized as they were at one time, however, the principal ones are still worthy of a place in any collection and many of the selected types rank with some of the best hybrids with regard to perfection of form and color. Cattleyas are easy to grow and our booklet dealing with the culture of these plants will be gladly mailed to anyone upon request.

Seedlings in Flasks

A close-up view of two of the flasks showing Cattleya seedlings in development. The flasks contain sterilized nutrient jelly on which the seed, after also being sterilized, is sown. In due time the small seedlings appear and continue to grow for varying periods of from six months to two years, after which they are removed from the flasks and transplanted—20 to 30 in a small pot—and grown in the open greenhouse. The length of time required to bring the plant to flower from the seed averages from five to seven years for Cattleyas, which may seem a very long time to wait, but it is intensely interesting to watch the development of the tiny seedlings and look forward to seeing the results.

This family is not a large one, and many of its species are of botanical interest only. The varieties offered are the most noteworthy.

BURFORDIENSE, asperata x pandurata.
BURFORDIENSE enjoys warm, moist atmosphere; flowers are large for the genus; sepals and petals pale green, lip greenish-yellow, blotched and veined with black. $50.00

MOOREANA. Species.
Perhaps the most beautiful of the white Coelogynes; enjoys cooler treatment and will do well in a Cattleya house; flowers carried on an erect spike; beautiful clear white with a deep yellow throat. $35.00

PANDURATA. Species.
Similar in color to its hybrid, Burfordiense, and thrives in the same treatment—warm, moist atmosphere. $50.00
Cymbidiums

Since the introduction of Insigne, many beautiful new forms have been developed in this family, and there is now a wide range of color in the many hybrids—although due to the fact that they practically all contain Insigne, there is considerable variation in the color of the seedlings from the same seed pod; hence it is almost impossible to describe them with any accuracy. The plants listed combine some of the best Cymbidiums in cultivation and all are well worthy of a place in a collection where these Orchids are appreciated.

The story belonging to this picture might well begin, "Where there's a will—etc." This greenhouse is owned by a lady who wanted to grow Orchids, but who had no available space on which to build a greenhouse. But the urge to grow Orchids was strong, and so a greenhouse was finally built on the roof of the drawing room, and so constructed that it opens into the boudoir. The owner cares for the plants herself, and experiences to the full the pleasure and delight to be obtained from association with the plants and the beauty of the flowers in all their freshness.

Dendrobiums

These plants are greatly admired by many people, and where well grown, give very pleasing results. The flowers of the Nobile section are very bright in color, and under the right cultural treatment are produced freely. The plants require abundance of heat and moisture when growing, with a decided rest when the growth is completed, at which time the plants should be given more air and light and less water.

Laeliocattleyas

Hybrids between Cattleya and Laelia, most of these have all the vigor of the Laelia parent, and to varying degrees the shape and quality of the Cattleya parent, until among the later hybrids the improvement in shape is really remarkable. There are many flowers to the spray which are usually carried on fairly long erect stems. Many brilliant colors are to be found among the various hybrids. The cultural requirements are the same as for Cattleyas, although a little less shade will be advisable.

Oncidiums

While all of the Oncidiums are interesting, those we have listed are the most useful from a commercial and decorative point of view. They are for the most part easily grown, and flower freely and are becoming increasingly popular. They require plenty of moisture when growing and about the same amount of shade that would be given to Cattleyas.

ALTISSIMUM. A strong, vigorous grower producing branching spikes of three to five feet; the flowers are small, barred and blotched with brown. $15.00
AMPLIATUM. One of the best yellow varieties; many sprays of two to four feet long with many flowers; flowers are about 1½ inches in diameter; nice plants, three to four bulbs—4-inch pots......$15.00

FLEXUOSUM. The flowers of this variety are produced on branching spikes, many flowers to the spray; sepals and petals red-brown, marked with greenish-yellow; lip bright canary yellow; plants have from three to five bulbs..............................$ 7.50

LURIDUM. A vigorous growing, free flowering variety giving long, many-flowered spikes; flowers from one to two inches across—yellowish-green, covered with red-brown blotches; of very easy cultivation; large specimen plants in 7-inch and 8-inch pans.............$15.00

MARSHALLIANUM. An attractive variety whose large flowers are produced in the early summer; strong plants having three to five bulbs..........................$10.00
